Racism is a driving force of health inequities and poor health outcomes, so addressing racism is critical for a healthier, more just world. Join the Boston University School of Public Health April 5, 6, and 7 for "Antiracism as Health Policy: Race, COVID-19, and Policy Reform." Panel discussions will explore the importance of collecting and utilizing data on race to better understand health outcomes, link research to policy, and examine data-informed antiracist health policy solutions. This series is co-hosted with the Boston University Center for Antiracist Research, and will feature a keynote lecture from Congresswoman Ayanna Pressley on Tuesday, April 6, and a conversation with Dr. Ibram X. Kendi, director of the Center for Antiracist Research, and Senator Elizabeth Warren on Wednesday, April 7. Join the conversation: <http://bit.ly/3kBFGEEd>
